About the role

We are looking for friendly, ambitious and motivated acousticians to join our thriving Noise and Vibration Team as Senior Consultants.

You will be trained to become an expert witness in matters relating to ill health claims (such as noise-induced hearing loss and hand-arm vibration syndrome). The role will also provide opportunities to work on environmental noise, planning matters, occupational risk management and typical acoustic consultancy services.

You will join a highly skilled team within an ambitious and energetic organisation.

About you

As you will predominantly spend your time acting as an expert witness you should have considerable experience in the field of acoustics and have excellent oral and written communication skills.

Applications are welcomed from candidates with consultancy experience gained in an industrial/occupational setting. Previous recent experience as an expert witness is desirable. Those from a regulatory background are encouraged to apply.

You will hold a Bachelor's degree in acoustics or a closely related subject (for example Physics). A relevant post-graduate qualification is desirable. You will be equally comfortable working in a team environment and individually.

What we can offer

We can offer relevant training a competitive remuneration package and an exciting career path. We provide private healthcare, life assurance, and a pension scheme.

Moreover, we will assist you in achieving a great work/life balance since this role is predominantly home based (with occasional site visits or court appearances). For those who prefer to be based in an office you can choose to work from any of our sites.
